An Exquisite Picture.

In the early days of daguerreotyping, when our chief—I might say only—ambition was to get a picture without those dull, black shadows that, like some genius of a Rembrandt, ever haunted our first dark dawns in the art, when artistical and picturesque effects gave us but little, if any concern, I had the pleasure of daguerreotyping one of the most charming pictures of an infant I have ever seen. The mother of the wee subject, like most mothers, wanted her darling taken alone and full-length—always, as is well known, a most trying task, and this time particularly so; for, at every effort I made to perform it, I was opposed by my little sitter to the full extent of his tiny lungs; and, although tiny, to such an extent that I was about giving it up as a thing impossible to accomplish, when a large Newfoundland dog belonging to the family, who had been all this time anxiously watching the mysterious operation, now thinking that his young master was being rather roughly dealt with, stepped proudly up to his side, and, with an air of defiance, stood for a moment looking me full in the face, and then gently nestled his head in the child’s lap. This acted like magic upon his fair companion, who instantly changed his countenance from fear and distress to that of conscious security; and, throwing his fat, dimpled arm around his noble protector’s neck, remained perfectly quiet and composed, seeming to say—if smiles say anything—’”Touch me now, if you dare!’” What a picture was this, so natural and so perfectly beautiful! I could not think of letting it pass away, like a morning’s dream, without trying to catch its shadow. Everything now was favorable; all in the room were still—all, indeed, seemed spell-bound. I was afraid to stir, lest I might break the charm and spoil this beautiful picture. My plate had grown sensitive by standing. With breathless silence I drew the shield, and in an instant was fixed upon silver a picture worthy of being wrought in gold.

M. P. SIMONS.

PHILADELPHIA, June 22d, 1871.

[End of text.]
Additional information regarding Montgomery Pike Simons can be found in Laurie A. Baty, "...and Simons." Montgomery Pike Simons of Philadelphia (ca. 1816–1877)," Daguerreian Annual 1993: 183–200.

EWER ARCHIVE P8710001
URL: http://www.daguerreotypearchive.org/texts/P8710001_SIMONS_ANTHONY_1871-06-22.pdf
Document author: Gary W. Ewer
Creation date: 2008-09-23 / Last revision: 2012-05-11
Citation information: Anthony’s Photographic Bulletin (New York) 2:6 (22 June 1871): 179.
Prepared from: photocopy from microfilm
Original spelling/punctuation/grammar generally maintained without correction. Any in-text corrections are bracketed.
The source text is Public Domain and may be freely quoted. As noted below, this document is copyright.
If citing directly from this document, please reference the Ewer Archive number and provide the following citation credit:

THE NECESSARY DISCLAIMERS:
The document creator has made every effort to insure the accuracy of the transcription. However, the information provided in this document is provided without warranty, either express or implied. The document creator will not be liable for any damages caused or alleged to be caused directly, indirectly, incidentally, or consequentially by the information provided by this text.

The document creator assumes no responsibility for accuracy of fact; the text is prepared "as found." Factual inaccuracies of the original text are generally not noted by the document creator. If this text is used in academic papers, accuracy should be confirmed by consulting original sources.

The document creator also assumes no responsibility regarding the correctness, suitability, or safety of any chemical or photographic processes that may be described by this text. Many of the chemicals used in early photographic processes are extremely toxic and should not be handled without a thorough knowledge of safe use.

The opinions expressed in this text are solely those of the original author and are not necessarily those of the Archive editor. Some texts may contain derogatory words. Any such word is certainly one that would not be used today. The words remain in the transcription, however, to maintain truthfulness to the original text.